Internal Medicine/Pediatrics

Description

Internal medicine/pediatrics is a combined specialty program that allows physicians to meet eligibility requirements for dual certification by the American Board of Internal Medicine and American Board of Pediatrics. Internal medicine/pediatrics programs were formerly jointly approved (not accredited) by the two boards, but are now fully accredited through the ACGME (Program Requirements effective June 26, 2006).

Prerequisites; Length of Training

No prerequisites; length of accredited programs is 4 years.

Medical Genetics

Professional Description

Medical geneticists specialize in medicine that involves the interaction between genes and health. They are trained to evaluate, diagnose, manage, treat and counsel individuals of all ages with hereditary disorders. This specialist uses modern cytogenetic, molecular, radiologic and biochemical testing to assist in specialized diagnostic evaluations, implement needed therapeutic interventions and provide genetic counseling and prevention through prenatal and preimplantation diagnosis. The Medical Geneticist plans and coordinates screening for genetic diseases involving single gene and chromosomal disorders, congenital anomalies, inborn errors of metabolism, multifactorial conditions, and common disorders with hereditary factors.

Prerequisites; Length of Training

No prerequisites are required when entering a 4-year program; 2 years of ACGME-accredited GME are required when entering a 2-year program. Length of accredited programs is 2 years or 4 years.

Subspecialties

Subspecialty programs accredited by the ACGME

- Molecular genetic pathology
- Medical biochemical genetics

Note: Molecular genetic pathology programs are jointly accredited by the Residency Review Committees for Medical Genetics and Pathology.

American Board of Medical Genetics specialty certificates

- Clinical Biochemical Genetics
- Clinical Cytogenetics
- Clinical Genetics
- Clinical Molecular Genetics
- Molecular Genetic Pathology (subspecialty)
- Medical Biochemical Genetics (subspecialty)

Note: Molecular genetic pathology certification is jointly offered by the American Board of Medical Genetics and American Board of Pathology.

Clinical Biochemical GeneticsProfessional Description

A clinical biochemical geneticist is doctoral-level individual (MD, DO, PhD) with expertise in the laboratory diagnosis of patients with inherited metabolic diseases. This includes specific knowledge and skills in the supervision of a clinical biochemical genetics diagnostic laboratory, methods of laboratory testing and analytical platforms (including various types of chromatography and mass spectrometry), interpretation of the clinical relevance of laboratory data, and laboratory management and quality assurance. The clinical biochemical geneticist also has an understanding of the clinical aspects of metabolic diseases, and acts as a consultant regarding laboratory diagnosis and management of a broad range of biochemical genetic disorders.

Clinical Genetics (MD)

Professional Description

A clinical geneticist is a specialist physician trained in the diagnosis, management and treatment of patients with genetically-influenced health problems using family medical histories, physical examinations, and cutting-edge genetic and genomic testing. Medical geneticists provide care to patients of all ages including newborns, pregnant women and adults. Areas of practice include diagnosis and management of individuals with chromosome abnormalities and genetic syndromes, dietary and medical management of inborn errors of metabolism, enzyme replacement therapies for lysosomal storage disorders, diagnosis and management of skeletal dysplasias and heritable disorders of bone mineral metabolism, prenatal counseling and diagnosis and management of familial cancer syndromes.

Source: American Board of Medical Genetics

A clinical geneticist demonstrates competence in providing comprehensive diagnostic, treatment, management and counseling services for individuals and families at risk for clinical disorders with a genetic basis. The specialist is trained to evaluate individuals of all ages who are at risk for hereditary conditions.

Medical Biochemical GeneticsProfessional Description

Medical biochemical geneticists provide comprehensive diagnostic, management, and genetic counseling services for patients with inborn errors of metabolism. They focus on the treatment of genetic disorders of intermediary metabolism, lysosomal storage diseases, disorders of energy metabolism, and related disorders.

Source: Medical biochemical genetics program requirements, ACGME

www.acgme.org/acWebsite/downloads/RRC_progReq/131medicalbiochemicalgenetics02132007.pdf

A medical biochemical geneticist demonstrates competence in the diagnosis, medical treatment and management of individuals with inherited metabolic conditions presenting clinically from infancy through adulthood, including via newborn screening. The subspecialist provides direct care and consultative care for individuals of all ages who are diagnosed with inborn errors of metabolism.

Neurological Surgery

Professional Description

Neurological surgery is a medical and surgical specialty that provides operative and nonoperative management (ie, prevention, diagnosis, evaluation, treatment, critical care, and rehabilitation) of disorders of the central, peripheral, and autonomic nervous systems, including their supporting structures and vascular supply; the evaluation and treatment of pathological processes that modify the function or activity of the nervous system, including the hypophysis; and the operative and nonoperative management of pain. As such, neurological surgery encompasses the surgical, nonsurgical, and stereotactic radiosurgical treatment of adult and pediatric patients with disorders of the nervous system: disorders of the brain, meninges, skull, and skull base, and their blood supply, including the surgical and endovascular treatment of disorders of the intracranial and extracranial vasculature supplying the brain and spinal cord; disorders of the pituitary gland; disorders of the spinal cord, meninges, and vertebral column, including those that may require treatment by fusion, instrumentation, or endovascular techniques; and disorders of the cranial, peripheral, and spinal nerves throughout their distribution.

Source: American Board of Neurological Surgery

Neurological surgery constitutes a medical discipline and surgical specialty that provides care for adult and pediatric patients in the treatment of pain or pathological processes that may modify the function or activity of the central nervous system (e.g., brain, hypophysis, and spinal cord), the peripheral nervous system (e.g., cranial, spinal, and peripheral nerves), the autonomic nervous system, the supporting structures of these systems (e.g., meninges, skull & skull base, and vertebral column), and their vascular supply (e.g., intracranial, extracranial, and spinal vasculature).

Treatment encompasses both non-operative management (e.g., prevention, diagnosis—including image interpretation—and treatments such as, but not limited to, neurocritical intensive care and rehabilitation) and operative management with its associated image use and interpretation (e.g., endovascular surgery, functional and restorative surgery, stereotactic radiosurgery, and spinal fusion—including its instrumentation).

Endovascular Surgical Neuroradiology

Professional Description

Endovascular surgical neuroradiology is a subspecialty that uses catheter technology, radiologic imaging, and clinical expertise to diagnose and treat diseases of the central nervous system. Practitioners have training and experience in:

- Signs and symptoms of disorders amenable to diagnosis and treatment by endovascular surgical neuroradiology techniques
- Neurological examinations to evaluate patients with neurological disorders
- Pathophysiology and natural history of these disorders
- Indications and contraindications to endovascular surgical neuroradiology procedures
- Clinical and technical aspects of endovascular surgical neuroradiology procedures
- Medical and surgical alternatives
- Preoperative and postoperative management of endovascular patients
- Neurointensive care management
- Fundamentals of imaging physics and radiation biology
- Interpretation of radiographic studies pertinent to the practice

Neurology

Professional Description

A neurologist focuses on the evaluation and treatment of adults and children with recurrent seizure activity and seizure disorders. These physicians have advanced knowledge of the pathophysiology, genetics, pathology, diagnosis and treatment of seizure disorders and are qualified to provide the latest treatment options, including medications, surgery, vagus nerve stimulation, investigational electronic devices and ketogenic diet.

Prerequisites; Length of Training

Programs are either 3 years or 4 years. Residents entering a 3-year program must have completed 1 year in an accredited program in the US or Canada.

Subspecialties

Subspecialty programs accredited by the ACGME

- Child neurology
- Clinical neurophysiology
- Endovascular surgical neuroradiology
- Hospice and palliative medicine
- Neurodevelopmental disabilities
- Neuromuscular medicine
- Pain medicine*
- Sleep medicine
- Vascular neurology

* In 2007, ACGME-accredited pain medicine programs under anesthesiology, neurology, physical medicine and rehabilitation, and psychiatry were combined into a multidisciplinary pain medicine subspecialty.

American Board of Psychiatry and Neurology subspecialty certificates

- Brain injury medicine
- Child neurology (special certification)
- Clinical neurophysiology
- Epilepsy
- Hospice and palliative medicine
- Neurodevelopmental disabilities
- Pain medicine
- Sleep medicine
- Vascular neurology

Nuclear Medicine

Professional Description

A nuclear medicine specialist uses radioactive chemicals for diagnosis and therapy. Radioactive chemicals are used to produce images that provide information about organ function, as well as cellular function on a molecular level, which is known as molecular imaging. Molecular imaging can be combined with anatomical imaging by using specialized cameras. The most common diagnostic applications of nuclear medicine include the early detection of coronary artery disease, cancer diagnosis and staging and the evaluation of the effect of cancer treatment. The fusion of molecular and anatomical information increases diagnostic accuracy and changes medical management. Radioactive materials are also used to treat a variety of health problems, including thyroid disorders and cancer.

Prerequisites; Length of Training

Prior to entering a nuclear medicine program, residents must have completed 1 year of broad clinical education in an accredited program in the US or Canada. Nuclear medicine programs are 3 years. Candidates may be admitted into the second or third year after having completed another accredited training program.

Subspecialties

No subspecialty programs accredited by the Accreditation Council for Graduate Medical Education; no subspecialty certificates offered by the American Board of Nuclear Medicine.

Data

Unless otherwise noted, all data are for 2011.

Ophthalmic Plastic and Reconstructive SurgeryProfessional Description

Physicians with training in ophthalmic plastic surgery can perform procedures around the eyes while taking advantage of opportunities to cosmetically enhance a patient's appearance. Ophthalmic plastic and reconstructive surgeons strike a balance between surgical science and facial appearance; they apply knowledge of ophthalmology, anatomy and tissue behavior, as well as an awareness of existing limitations, to undertake the most appropriate course of treatment for a given patient. Some of the common problems treated surgically include droopy brows, droopy lids, redundant upper and lower eyelid skins, furrows on the forehead and around the eyes, and congenital disfigurements.

Prerequisites; Length of Training

Completion of an ophthalmology residency program is required; length of the fellowship is 24 months.

The additional training in otology and neurotology emphasizes the study of embryology, anatomy, physiology, epidemiology, pathophysiology, pathology, genetics, immunology, microbiology, and the etiology of diseases of the ear and temporal bone.

The neurotologist should have command of the core knowledge and understanding of:

- The basic medical sciences relevant to the temporal bone, lateral skull base, and related structures; the communication sciences, including knowledge of audiology, endocrinology, and neurology as they relate to the temporal bone, lateral skull base, and related structures
- Advanced diagnostic expertise and advanced medical and surgical management skills for the care of diseases and disorders of the petrous apex, infratemporal fossa, internal auditory canals, cranial nerves, and lateral skull base (including the occipital bone, sphenoid bone, temporal bone, mesial aspect of the dura and intradural management), in conjunction with neurological surgery

A neurotologist has acquired expertise in the medical and surgical management of diseases and disorders of the temporal bone, lateral skull base, and related structures beyond that inherent to the practice of otolaryngology-head and neck surgery.

Pathology

Professional Description

A pathologist deals with the causes and nature of disease and contributes to diagnosis, prognosis and treatment through knowledge gained by the laboratory application of the biologic, chemical and physical sciences. This specialist uses information gathered from the microscopic examination of tissue specimens, cells and body fluids, and from clinical laboratory tests on body fluids and secretions for the diagnosis, exclusion and monitoring of disease.

To acknowledge the diverse activities in the practice of pathology and to accommodate the interests of individuals wanting to enter the field, the American Board of Pathology offers primary certification through the following three routes: combined Anatomic Pathology and Clinical Pathology, Anatomic Pathology only and Clinical Pathology only. A variety of subspecialty certificates are offered. Primary certification in Anatomic Pathology or Clinical Pathology may be combined with some of the subspecialty certifications.

Blood Banking/ Transfusion Medicine

Professional Description

A pathologist who specializes in blood banking/transfusion medicine is responsible for the maintenance of an adequate blood supply, blood donor and patient-recipient safety, and appropriate blood utilization. Pre-transfusion compatibility testing and antibody testing assure that blood transfusions, when indicated, are as safe as possible. This specialist directs the preparation and safe use of specially prepared blood components, including red blood cells, white blood cells, platelets and plasma constituents, and marrow or stem cells for transplantation.

Chemical Pathology

Professional Description

A chemical pathologist is an expert in the biochemistry of the human body in relation to the understanding of the cause and progress of disease. This physician functions as a clinical consultant in the diagnosis and treatment of human disease. Chemical pathology entails the application of biochemical data to the detection, confirmation, or monitoring of disease.

Prerequisites; Length of Training

Completion of an ACGME-accredited residency in anatomic pathology and clinical pathology, anatomic pathology, or clinical pathology is required. Length of ACGME-accredited programs is 1 year.

Clinical Informatics

Professional Description

Physicians who practice clinical informatics collaborate with other health care and information technology professionals to promote patient care that is safe, efficient, effective, timely, patient-centered, and equitable. Clinical informaticians transform health care by analyzing, designing, implementing, and evaluating information and communication systems that enhance individual and population health outcomes, improve patient care, and strengthen the clinician-patient relationship. Clinical informaticians use their knowledge of patient care combined with their understanding of informatics concepts, methods, and tools to assess information and knowledge needs of health care professionals and patients; to characterize, evaluate, and refine clinical processes; to develop, implement, and refine clinical decision support systems; and to lead or participate in the procurement, customization, development, implementation, management, evaluation, and continuous improvement of clinical information systems.

Prerequisites; Length of Training

Previous certification by an ABMS member board is required. Length of ACGME-accredited programs has been requested to be 2 years (accreditation of this field by the ACGME is currently under consideration).

Cytopathology

Professional Description

A cytopathologist is an anatomic pathologist trained in the diagnosis of human disease by means of the study of cells obtained from body secretions and fluids, by scraping, washing, or sponging the surface of a lesion, or by the aspiration of a tumor mass or body organ with a fine needle. A major aspect of a cytopathologist's practice is the interpretation of Papanicolaou-stained smears of cells from the female reproductive systems, the Pap test. However, the cytopathologist's expertise is applied to the diagnosis of cells from all systems and areas of the body. He/she is a consultant to all medical specialists.

Molecular Genetic PathologyProfessional Description

A molecular genetic pathologist is expert in the principles, theory, and technologies of molecular biology and molecular genetics. This expertise is used to make or confirm diagnoses of Mendelian genetic disorders, disorders of human development, and infectious diseases and malignancies, and to assess the natural history of those disorders. A molecular genetic pathologist provides information about gene structure, function, and alteration and applies laboratory techniques for diagnosis, treatment, and prognosis for individuals with related disorders.

Prerequisites; Length of Training

Completion of a 4-year ACGME-accredited program in pathology or medical genetics is required. Length of ACGME-accredited molecular genetic pathology programs is 1 year.

Pediatrics

Professional Description

Pediatrics is a specialty that focuses on the physical, emotional, and social health of children from birth to young adulthood. Pediatric care encompasses a broad spectrum of health services ranging from preventive health care to the diagnosis and treatment of acute and chronic diseases.

Pediatrics is a discipline that deals with biological, social, and environmental influences on the developing child and with the impact of disease and dysfunction on development. Children differ anatomically, physiologically, immunologically, psychologically, developmentally, and metabolically from adults.

The pediatrician understands the constantly changing functional status of his or her patients incident to growth and development and the consequent changing standards of "normal" for age. A pediatrician is a medical specialist, who is primarily concerned with the health, welfare, and development of children, and is uniquely qualified for these endeavors by virtue of interest and initial training. Maintenance of these competencies is achieved through experience, training, continuous education, self-assessment, and practice improvement.

A pediatrician is able to define accurately the child's health status as well as to serve as a consultant and to make use of other specialists as consultants. Because the child's welfare is heavily dependent on the home and family, the pediatrician supports efforts to create a nurturing environment. Such support includes education about healthful living and anticipatory guidance for both patients and parents.

A pediatrician participates at the community level in preventing or solving problems in child health care and publicly advocates the causes of children.

Physical Medicine and Rehabilitation

Professional Description

Physical medicine and rehabilitation is concerned with evaluating and treating patients with short or long-term physical and/or cognitive impairments and disability that result from musculoskeletal conditions (such as neck or back pain, or sports or work injuries), neurological conditions (such as stroke, brain injury, or spinal cord injury), or medical conditions. Physicians have expertise in therapeutic exercise, medications, and injections for management of pain and spasticity, electrodiagnosis, prostheses (artificial limbs), orthoses (braces), and other equipment to assist daily activities, and coordinate treatment to help patients improve their physical, psychological, social, and vocational function.

Prerequisites; Length of Training

No previous GME is required when entering an accredited 4-year program that includes 12 months of fundamental clinical skills in areas other than physical medicine and rehabilitation; 1 year of previous GME (eg, Transitional Year) is required when entering a 3-year program.

Subspecialties

Subspecialty programs accredited by the ACGME

- Hospice and palliative medicine
- Neuromuscular medicine
- Pain medicine*
- Pediatric rehabilitation medicine
- Spinal cord injury medicine
- Sports medicine

* In 2007, ACGME-accredited pain medicine programs under anesthesiology, neurology, physical medicine and rehabilitation, and psychiatry were combined into a multidisciplinary pain medicine subspecialty.

American Board of Physical Medicine and Rehabilitation subspecialty certificates

- Brain injury medicine
- Hospice and palliative medicine
- Neuromuscular medicine
- Pain medicine
- Pediatric rehabilitation medicine
- Spinal cord injury medicine
- Sports medicine

Plastic Surgery

Professional Description

Plastic surgery deals with the repair, reconstruction, or replacement of physical defects of form or function involving the skin, musculoskeletal system, craniomaxillofacial structures, hand, extremities, breast and trunk, external genitalia or cosmetic enhancement of these areas of the body. Cosmetic surgery is an essential component of plastic surgery. The plastic surgeon uses cosmetic surgical principles both to improve overall appearance and to optimize the outcome of reconstructive procedures.

Special knowledge and skill in the design and surgery of grafts, flaps, free tissue transfer and replantation is necessary. Competence in the management of complex wounds, the use of implantable materials, and in tumor surgery is required. Plastic surgeons have been prominent in the development of innovative techniques such as microvascular and craniomaxillofacial surgery, liposuction, and tissue transfer. Anatomy, physiology, pathology, and other basic sciences are fundamental to the specialty.

Competency in plastic surgery implies an amalgam of basic medical and surgical knowledge, operative judgment, technical expertise, ethical behavior, and interpersonal skills to achieve problem resolution and patient satisfaction.

Prerequisites; Length of Training

Accredited plastic surgery programs are either independent (3 years length) or integrated (6 years). Prerequisites for the independent programs are 1) a minimum of 3 years clinical education with progressive responsibility in a general surgery program; 2) completion of a neurological surgery, orthopaedic surgery, otolaryngology, or urology residency; or 3) completion of an educational program in oral and maxillofacial surgery approved by the American Dental Association (for individuals holding the DMD/MD or DDS/MD degree).

Subspecialties

Subspecialty programs accredited by the ACGME

- Craniofacial surgery
- Hand surgery

American Board of Plastic Surgery subspecialty certificates

- Plastic surgery within the head and neck (inactive subspecialty certificate)
- Surgery of the hand

Craniofacial Surgery (Plastic Surgery within the Head and Neck)

Professional Description

(Note: This is currently an inactive subcertificate.)

A plastic surgeon or otolaryngologist with additional training in plastic and reconstructive procedures within the head, face, neck, and associated structures, including cutaneous head and neck oncology and reconstruction, management of maxillofacial trauma, soft tissue repair, and neural surgery.

The field is diverse and involves a wide age range of patients, from the newborn to the aged. While both cosmetic and reconstructive surgery are practiced, there are many additional procedures which interface with them. Cosmetic procedures include otoplasty; surgery of the aging face (brow lift, blepharoplasty, face lift); rhinoplasty; facial implants (cheek, nasal, and chin); facial resurfacing; and liposuction/lipoplasty. Reconstructive procedures performed include maxillofacial trauma; skin grafts and flaps; repair of congenital facial defects (hemangiomas, cleft lip and palate, nasal abnormalities); reconstruction of the jaws and other facial bones; reanimation/rehabilitation of the paralyzed face; nerve repair; periorbital surgery; and biomedical implant insertion. Areas of research in this field include materials biocompatibility; wound healing adjuncts; skin repair/regeneration; and bone reconstruction.

Preventive Medicine

Professional Description

A preventive medicine specialist focuses on the health of individuals and defined populations to protect, promote, and maintain health and well-being and to prevent disease, disability, and premature death. They may be a specialist in general preventive medicine, public health, occupational medicine or aerospace medicine. The distinctive components of preventive medicine include:

- Biostatistics and the application of biostatistical principles and methodology
- Epidemiology and its application to population-based medicine and research
- Health services management and administration, including developing, assessing, and assuring health policies; planning, implementing, directing, budgeting, and evaluating population health and disease management programs; and utilizing legislative and regulatory processes to enhance health
- Control of environmental factors that may adversely affect health
- Control and prevention of occupational factors that may adversely affect health safety
- Clinical preventive medicine activities, including measures to promote health and prevent the occurrence, progression, and disabling effects of disease and injury
- Assessment of social, cultural, and behavioral influences on health

Aerospace Medicine

Professional Description

The focus of aerospace medicine is on the determination and maintenance of the health, safety, and performance of persons involved in air and space travel. Aerospace medicine, as a broad field of endeavor, offers dynamic challenges and opportunities for physicians, nurses, physiologists, bioenvironmental engineers, industrial hygienists, environmental health practitioners, human factors specialists, psychologists, and other professionals. Those in the field are dedicated to enhancing health, promoting safety, and improving performance of individuals who work or travel in unusual environments. The environments of space and aviation provide significant challenges, such as microgravity, radiation exposure, G-forces, emergency ejection injuries, and hypoxic conditions, for those embarking in their exploration. Areas of interest range from space and atmospheric flight to undersea activities, and the environments that are studied cover a wide spectrum, extending from the "micro-environments" of space or diving suits to those of "Spaceship Earth."

Occupational Medicine

Professional Description

Occupational and environmental medicine is perhaps the most wide ranging of all medical specialties. It is the medical specialty devoted to the prevention and management of occupational and environmental injury, illness and disability, and promotion of health and productivity of workers, their families, and communities.

Occupational medicine was previously identified as "industrial medicine." This term was used when heavy industry (eg, lumbering, automobile manufacturing, mining, railroads, steel manufacturers, etc) employed physicians to provide acute medical and surgical care for employees. By 1945, medical programs had spread to business organizations with a predominance of clerical and service employees. Large banks, insurance companies, mercantile establishments, etc, could not be described as industrial. Therefore, the broader designation of "occupational medicine" came into common use.

Today, the complexity and pervasiveness of modern industrial processes afford occupational and environmental medicine physicians the opportunity to address work site and environmental concerns and such community health and policy issues as atmospheric pollution, product safety, health promotion, and benefits value management. The term "environmental medicine" has also recently been used to describe this growing, challenging, modern medical specialty. Environmental medicine has been defined as the branch of medical science that addresses the impact of chemical and physical stressors on individuals and groups. Both occupational and environmental medicine use similar skills and focus on the recognition and prevention of hazardous exposures.

Public Health and General Preventive Medicine

Professional Description

A public health physician helps guide a community, agency, health organization, medical office, or program in pursuit of group or community health goals. This includes physicians who plan, provide, and administer public health and preventive medicine services in public, private, or voluntary settings.

The public health practitioner:

- Performs epidemiological investigations of acute and chronic diseases and injuries
- Uses appropriate statistical techniques in the design of studies and interpretation of findings relative to disease interventions performed on individuals and in monitoring and experimental protocols
- Plans, administers, and evaluates programs to promote health and prevent disease in medical practice settings and in public health agencies
- Designs, performs, and evaluates clinical trials
- Applies clinical interventions in the general population
- Assesses health risk factors in individual persons and groups and prescribes appropriate interventions
- Assesses and ameliorates the impact of environmental and occupational risk factors on individual persons and on groups
- Assesses the clinical and public health program needs of populations, eg, workers, communities, and military groups

Medical Toxicology

Professional Description

A specialist who is an expert in evaluating and managing patients with accidental or intentional poisoning through exposure to prescription and nonprescription medications, drugs of abuse, household or industrial toxins, and environmental toxins.

Important areas of medical toxicology include acute pediatric and adult drug ingestion; drug abuse, addiction, and withdrawal; chemical poisoning exposure and toxicity; hazardous materials exposure and toxicity; and occupational toxicology.

Prerequisites; Length of Training

Completion of an ACGME-accredited residency is required; length of accredited programs is 2 years.

Undersea and Hyperbaric Medicine

Professional Description

A specialist who treats decompression illness and diving accident cases and uses hyperbaric oxygen therapy to treat conditions such as carbon monoxide poisoning, gas gangrene, nonhealing wounds, tissue damage from radiation and burns, and bone infections. This specialist also serves as consultant to other physicians in all aspects of hyperbaric chamber operations, and assesses risks and applies appropriate standards to prevent disease and disability in divers and other persons working in altered atmospheric conditions.

Prerequisites; Length of Training

Completion of an ACGME-accredited fellowship is required; length of accredited programs is 1 year.

Psychiatry

Professional Description

A psychiatrist specializes in the prevention, diagnosis, and treatment of mental, addictive, and emotional disorders such as schizophrenia and other psychotic disorders, mood disorders, anxiety disorders, substance-related disorders, sexual and gender identity disorders, and adjustment disorders. The psychiatrist is able to understand the biologic, psychologic, and social components of illness, and therefore is uniquely prepared to treat the whole person. A psychiatrist is qualified to order diagnostic laboratory tests and to prescribe medications, evaluate and treat psychologic and interpersonal problems, and intervene with families who are coping with stress, crises, and other problems in living.

A psychiatrist specializes in the evaluation and treatment of mental, addictive and emotional disorders such as schizophrenia and other psychotic disorders, mood disorders, anxiety disorders, substance-related disorders, sexual and gender identity disorders and adjustment disorders.

Psychosomatic Medicine

Professional Description

A psychiatrist who specializes in the diagnosis and treatment of psychiatric disorders and symptoms in complex medically ill patients. This subspecialty includes treatment of patients with acute or chronic medical, neurological, obstetrical, or surgical illness in which psychiatric illness affects their medical care and/or quality of life, such as HIV infection, organ transplantation, heart disease, renal failure, cancer, stroke, traumatic brain injury, high-risk pregnancy, and chronic obstructive pulmonary disease, among others. Patients also may be those who have a psychiatric disorder that is the direct consequence of a primary medical condition, or a somatoform disorder or psychological factors affecting a general medical condition. Psychiatrists specializing in psychosomatic medicine provide consultation-liaison services in general medical hospitals, attend on medical psychiatry inpatient units, and provide collaborative care in primary care and other outpatient settings.
