

GME Program Coordinator Excellence Award 2012

Tracie L. Bass

Internal Medicine
The George Washington University
Washington, DC

Nominators had this to say:

"I feel that Tracie has helped take this program from a very good, solid program to an excellent one! She has helped inspire house-staff and faculty alike to become involved in community work as well as academic and research projects by facilitating and introducing residents to faculty and other members of the university community. She is an integral part of the recruitment process. She attends and contributes to our weekly Friday meetings, educational retreats and house-staff retreats. She has helped make E-Value a part of GW. Tracie has taught almost every other residency and fellowship coordinator how to use E-Value. She has also helped a number of coordinators with their successful ACGME site visits that have resulted in full 5 year accreditation cycles. She has run workshops as part of our GME retreat for faculty and coordinators as well as workshops at the national level for ACGME."

"As expressed by Tamara Lyons, fellowship coordinator for medicine subspecialties, "Tracie's support and advice during the Geriatric Medicine site visit in December proved to be invaluable. Everything I learned about the PIF, the organization of materials, and what is expected can be attributed to Tracie. Her support and encouragement helped immensely." Tracie has participated in the annual GME Retreat as a workshop co-presenter, with our GME Director and another Residency Coordinator. She has also presented at the annual APDIM national meeting."
